

near York

197, Madison Avenue.

Jan. 17, 1889.

My dear Watson,

Shall I spend Saturday night with you & Sunday next? I think now of taking the ~~eleven~~ eleven o'clock train on Saturday reaching Boston about 6 Pm. I'll get my supper at the Revere House & go to Cambridge in the evening if not too stormy.
If not convenient - for Mrs. Quincy to see me then send a note to the Hotel & I'll come out in the forenoon of Sunday and go to church with you - I have an extra week's furlough & divide it between this place & Boston - I'll tell you about my visit in Washington when I see you. It was all too brief though I was there ten days. Another time I should be tempted to drop in upon J. D. Smith whom I have not seen since we graduated, and whose repute as a botanist at the Capitol is high. Dr Vasey spoke of his Hubanum as being especially fine.

It's a doleful stormy day.
Remember me to your household.
Yours truly W. G. Jervis -